

Eight principles – RPS English Pharmacy Boards

The eight principles the Royal Pharmaceutical Society has developed that could help shape the future of the profession are:

1. Patients and the public have a right to access medicines (including prescription-only medicines, pharmacy medicines and general sale list medicines), quality-assured medicines information and pharmaceutical services
2. Patient safety and well-being are paramount and these need to be ensured via quality systems and processes
3. Patients should have their medicines supply overseen by a pharmacist and they should have a right to counselling about their medicines
4. Patients have a right to expect that a pharmacist will perform a professional check on every prescription dispensed
5. The need and respect for the pharmacy profession must be protected
6. Any changes to supervision should not lead to an increase in risk and any changes in workload must be at an acceptable level for the profession
7. A pharmacist can only be responsible for one pharmacy at any one time
8. Supervision models may differ in different settings but there must be adequate staffing levels to deliver the services required

The Relevance and importance of The Pharmacists Daily Tasks - Now and In The Future

Daily Pharmacist Activities	Time Taken	Importance To Your Pharmacy Today	Future Proof How relevant with recent advances in technology	Patient View How important is this service to the patient
1.
2.
3.
4.
5.
6.
7.
8.
9.
10.				